codeboy's rant

Man, my pants are gonna get soaked again. I think it's been raining for the past four or five days. Perfect time to catch up on some games, I guess. I imagine most of you are playing Resident Evil 3 as opposed to reading this dumb!?! newsletter, and maybe it's for the better. I actually bothered to take that game home with me, I own all of two games for the PSX, and do some home studying. It's not as though it's any different from the other two titles when it comes to hacking the codes, but I enjoy everything that's packed into the games, dare I say it's actually interesting to hack. Anyway, I'm deep into some crazy list consisting of more kanji than English when the girlfriend drops by. It's early in the evening, so I figure I keep at it for a bit, she'll understand. I think she finally left around eleven, but I can't be sure. It was kinda strange though (reminded me of what gaming used to be like).

Ignoring such things as females, food and water was quite common ten years ago, but seldom happens these days, and especially not the food part. Hmm, so I think I made it an entire day without shredding something, and actually enjoyed a game for a while. Then went back to the office the next day and tortured myself with the likes of Road Rash 64 and E.T.64, which were right on schedule.

As many of you know (all of you should), Dangerous Water's sister code source, www.gameshark.com, is extremely popular amongst GameShark users who own PCs. And for good reason! InterAct has hired 80 monkeys to work day and night in order to update the site for your viewing pleasure. Not only is www.gameshark.com the only authorized code source on the web, but you'll find strategy guides, programmers cheats, reviews, fun contests, the Jimmy No-Knowz poll of the day, Codeboy's senseless banter and forum, Little Timmy's dating service and lots more (...lots!).

ABUSE THE POWER, BABY, YEAH!!

editor's note

Oh boy, oh boy, SharkWire Online is in stores now (or at least it should be)! Yeah, that's right I said "in"...uhhh, hmm. So, are you gonna get it? I know I am. I can't get online at home so I've got to have it. Granted I can't access any porn or Brittany Spears websites, but hey, I can get all of the hottest game industry news, codes (programmer/GameShark), interviews, reviews/previews, strategy guides, and tips; plus, sports scores and news, Xtreme sports news, fashion news, wrestling news (hot damn), movie news/reviews/previews/release dates and other stuff. I repeat, we will have WRESTLING news! Wrestling...the most popular sport (sport?) in the world? I thought that was duckpin bowling. I know a lot of Highlandtownies are voting for duckpin bowling to be the state sport in MD. Hold on! Stop the press. If I continue to talk about duckpin bowling, I think I will gouge my eyes out...with CodeBoy's fingers. All crusty and emaciated...it would be a fate worse than death. Just get SharkWire or go away!

BTW (that's By The Way for all you non-web browsers): We have new member to our Dangerous Waters crew! Welcome savior..."Hi savior" (I don't understand the lowercase "s" either)! This fine display of a gentleman will be writing reviews, previews and a new feature, strategy guides. We've yet to have strategy guides as part of our repertoire, but what the hay!

Have you purchased a Dreamcast yet? Me neither, but we have a few stations here in the ol' office. I have to say the frame rate and graphics on all of the games we have are unlike anything I've ever seen. If DC is this good, I can't even begin to imagine what PSX2 is going to look like. Think about it, Dreamcast is cutting edge for today, but people are saying PSX2 is going to blow it out of the water. DVD, Internet and a processor so fast it will induce seizures into the entire population of Nantucket! I am waiting for PSX2 and that's final. I will just stick to playing the Dreamcast at work (getting paid to play is so much more fun!)

Man I have been bombarded with artwork from you guys. Normally I would gripe about receiving so much mail, but this is great! Keep up the good work you guys! This month's winner is awesome! And remember if you want a free DexDrive, get your artwork to me ASAP.

I think I'm going to be sick:

The Voice of GameShark Fans.

Well kids, I'm out of here. It has been a pleasure to work with InterAct for the past few years and an absolute blast to be part of the GameShark team. It has also been great to write reviews for you and try to answer your questions (notice I said, "try"). Contained in this issue are my final reviews for Dangerous Waters and then I head out to graduate school. I realize this might come as quite a shock to some and others may be glad I am gone. Either way, be sure to pester CodeBoy plenty and my replacement as well (like there can be one).

Now, on to my final letters section:

Hi, I'm the person who can't think of a decent name to E-mail people with.

I heard some kids talking about how "great" Pokémon Snap was and that everyone should buy it. I rented it from a friend and beat it (and the challenge scores) in less than 2 hours (1 hour and 56 minutes). I'm not saying that it is a bad game, I'm just saying that it was WAAAAAY too easy.

-Goddess (online)

I agree. How hard could it be to take pictures of Pokémon for points? I think CodeBoy beat it rather quickly as well.

-Kato

Got a question? We'd like to hear from you. Send your letters to: Dangerous Waters Mailbox, 10999 McCormick Road, Hunt Valley, MD 21031 email: codeboy@gameshark.com or kato@gameshark.com

We also received a letter from Phillip who lives in Scottsdale, KY. Due to its length we could not print the entire thing but here is a sampling verbatim:

I don't know why I waste my time righting you this letter, because all you do is 'stick-it' full of thing like it was just a catalog!! Who the...(insert choice phase here)...am I if I'm a GameShark fan and I like to get new codes? I'm not the only one out here. So here goes nothing!!

-Phillip, Scottsdale, KY

From there the letter descended into a conversation with himself. It was really rather humorous. Phillip, unfortunately we could not print your entire satirical masterpiece (due to space problems and some other choice language issues...if you readers know what I mean) but I can answer your questions in the order you raised them. They are: not yet, we do not know either and yes we do.

That's all she wrote folks. Now I am off to the green pasture that is the United States postgraduate system. Take care everyone, I'm out.

And be sure to:

An unbiased look at what's hot and what's not.

Title: NFL Quarterback Club 2000
Developer: Iguana
Publisher: Acclaim
Format: Cartridge
of Players: 1-4
Difficulty: Moderate
Available: Now

Is Acclaim trying to take a bite out of EA's hold on sports titles on the N64? They already released Star Baseball 2000 and now it seems they are taking aim at the football market with the third installment of the Quarterback series NFL Quarterback Club 2000.

This game looks great. The motion captures are smooth and the graphics are sharp. The player movements look realistic (the spin moves, jukes, and catches are awesome). There is a wide selection of offensive and defensive plays available and vary depending on the team you choose.

You are also given the option to create your own players and team. Players from this season's roster are available as well as last years Pro Bowl selections, Acclaims programmers' team, and great teams from the past.

Can you become the next great quarterback of the new millennium?

You can even use your created team in a season. Merely swap with whatever team you would like to replace and takeover their 16 game schedule.

There were a few gameplay issues that did bother me. The first being the fact that there always seemed to be a set of plays that my quarterback would throw the ball away without my input. I would just snap the ball and he would throw to the sidelines on his own. I could not get the game to do this all the time but it would do it on its own (never on the same play but it always seemed to happen on second or third downs). The other thing would be that the defense would just stop going after the ball carrier (whether that is the Quarterback, Halfback, or Fullback). The linemen would come through the offensive line and stop.

Other than these issues which really can be annoying, NFL Quarterback Club 2000 is a rather decent game. It does take some getting used to the control but after that adjustment it runs really smooth. Things are definitely looking up for football on the N64. ☺

There's plenty of sharp graphics, and even sharper pain in this latest installment.

Title: Madden 2000
Developer: EA
Publisher: EA Sports
Format: CD
of Players: 1-8
Difficulty: Moderate
Available: Now

Well, autumn is here again and that means football. I remember playing football in the street in my neighborhood growing up and the 2-a-day practices in High School. Hit 'em and get hit that is what it is all about, but I digress. For you game players out there, this means another fall filled with a plethora of football titles for the PSX.

EA Sports has released another in its long series of football titles, Madden 2000. This game returns with many of the same features as last year but has improved in almost every aspect. The Create-a-player feature has been reworked to make it more user friendly and the Create-a-player also returns with unlimited points. Now you can create the Pro Bowl running back, quarterback, linemen, linebacker, or defensive back you know you could have been if you had the chance.

Franchise Mode allows you to take the coaching job on your favorite team. Take them through the season and into the playoffs. But just like most NFL jobs, it is all based on your performance. You must do well if you want to keep your job. After the season ends, you can see if your players improved at all.

4.1 speed will get you a pretty good return, and maybe a million dollar contract.

You are also responsible for trades, signing and resigning of players, and drafting new talent. If it seems somewhat overwhelming, the CPU can take care of it for you.

There are all new motion captures for the players as well. The graphics are as flawless as I have ever seen in a Madden game. Enhanced gameplay and graphics, plus a plethora of improved features make Madden 2000 my first choice. There's no doubt about it, Madden 2000 is definitely king of the gridiron this season. ☺

InterView

This month I had the pleasure of speaking with Robert Lamb, Lead Programmer of Blitz 2000 at Point of View, Inc. We hit all of the hot topics: Games, Love, Food and much more. Enjoy!

Dangerous Waters: Hello Mr. Lamb, I'm not going to beat around the bush here, where are you from?

Robert Lamb: I couldn't believe it when I read last month's interview with Rick Raymo, to find he's from Newfane, VT. I had no idea tiny Newfane was such a hotbed of gaming talent! I lived there when I was a kid, and always went back to visit my relatives each summer. Talk about small world!

My family moved from Vermont to Detroit, then to Dallas—which is where I mostly grew up. All that moving around means I don't have a Texas accent, except when I'm drinking beer with my friends from back home. I went to college in Austin, which was a great place to perfect my accent (lots of great bars).

DW: When and how did you get started with POV?

RL: I used to work as an electrical engineer, and got to work on great graphics, image processing, and sound processing projects. I left the computer industry to travel for about 2 years (at least, that was the plan). Five years later, I found myself in Tahoe at the end of ski season, wondering where all the money went. I didn't want to move back to a city, and got incredibly lucky to find POV was hiring. I was thrilled to get to stay in the mountains, and still have a "real" job again. Our office is in the mountains, right on Lake Tahoe. I'm hoping they'll let me out of the office when we ship NFL Blitz 2000 so I can remember how to ride my mountain bike. Hope I don't fall off a cliff (again), YIKES!

DW: Thigh highs or control tops (ongoing pursuit of the truth)?

RL: Thigh highs, definitely. Wow! (Sorry, I let my imagination run away with me for a second there—one of the hazards of being in such a visual field). What was the question again?

DW: Did you work on the original Blitz? Or was Blitz 2000 your first?

RL: I started with POV when we were doing the port for the original Blitz. Next thing I knew, they made me the lead programmer on Blitz 2000. I got to deal with all kinds of fun things like schedules, and technical design documents and all other sorts of junk - oops, I mean incredibly important and useful paperwork (just in case my producer reads this, hi!).

DW: What other titles have you worked on besides Blitz 2000?

RL: Blitz is my first game title. It's been great doing this port. I'm thoroughly impressed at how well the original Midway team balanced the gameplay elements of Blitz. They have the arcade concept down cold, and I think it translates well both to the consoles and to the PC. They came up with a game that is easy to learn, immediately fun and exciting, and still has depth when you keep playing it. We've been working on Blitz and Blitz 2000 for a couple years now, and we still have a blast when we challenge each other in the office, especially in 4-player mode.

Robert Lamb has the bird's eye point of view on everything from thigh highs to hard-hitting tackles.

DW: Take a look into your crystal ball for me. Do you see Blitz moving on to the next gen systems, especially Dreamcast? What is in store for the future of POV?

RL: NFL Blitz 2000 is a launch title for the Dreamcast, so it's available right away. Midway will definitely be moving forward with all the next gen systems with Blitz. POV has quite a few projects in the works, and hopes to continue a long and lucrative relationship with Midway.

DW: Now I have to ask, which do you prefer: Glazed, Jelly or Cream filled?

RL: Jelly filled...the bigger the better. Although, there is much to be said for plain - especially when you do your own glazing, a little chocolate syrup dripped over them, perhaps? Yum. Oh, were you talking about donuts?

DW: Will there be a Blitz 2001, can you fill us in on what it will be like? Give us the insider sneak peek!

RL: I wish I could, but I don't even know yet. POV will be involved with the next version, but we haven't yet had the meeting with Midway about what new features they want. Our whole team has been brainstorming new ideas, and we each have a wish list, but we haven't consolidated lists yet. It will depend on which direction Midway wants to take the game, and what the NFL will allow us to do with the license. We have some great, fun new ideas, but not all of them fit with the license.

DW: Have you ever used a GameShark? Perhaps on Blitz?

RL: They don't actually let me play the games around here. When they unchain me from my desk, they're afraid I'll break the hardware. "Can't let the technical guys too near the equipment, you know." (Or to the public—might scare off the timid ones).

DW: What is your opinion on these next gen systems? Do you think they will fly? Or are the manufacturers beating a dead horse?

RL: I can hardly wait for the new systems, both to play all the cool new games, and to start working with them for our own projects. I think the new systems are going to bring games to a new level. Things are just going to get better and better. The power of the new consoles will hopefully allow us to balance the quest a little better between gameplay and technical innovation.

Of course, the new power also means that expectations will be much higher. I'm sure we'll have to work real hard on the technical side to wring the best performance out of each next gen system. It looks like all the multiprocessing makes tuning and balancing of system resources even more important, adding another level of complexity for the programmer. As soon as we add the level of detail to the textures and models to achieve the visual quality that will be expected on the next gen systems, we'll be running out of system memory and processor speed before you know it. Then we'll have to start applying all the tricks we learned with the previous systems.

Will they fly? That depends on marketing more than anything. I remember when IBM first shipped the PC, and I was already working with much better stuff from HP that didn't cost as much. We all thought, what idiot would buy that thing? Later, the Amiga and Betamax failed, and OS/2 never got off the ground. I've learned the hard way that marketing beats the superior product every damn time. (I don't sound bitter there do I).

I would like to thank Robert Lamb and POV for this opportunity to chat. Look to the future for more from Robert and POV. Point of View, Inc. is a leading developer of games for the Sony Playstation, Dreamcast, PC, and Nintendo 64. Since February 1996, Point of View has developed over twelve titles, including NFL Blitz, NFL Blitz 2000, Mortal Kombat Trilogy, Sports Car GT and Ready 2 Rumble.

Hackers Heaven

Learn How To Hack Like A Pro, From The Pros

Well, it's time for the wacky world of hacking help and guidelines to continue. This time we shall talk about how certain codes work. For instance, let's start with the 'No Random Battle' code for FF7 code work? For the most part, most games have a random number generator that determines how many steps you must take before a battle will begin. So, let's say you've found the address for the number of steps you must take before a battle will begin. Your next step is to make that address constant. There are 2 types of 'No Random Battle' code: codes that increase, and codes that decrease. Below is an example of both:

Codes that increase tend to be easiest to find. First allow your character to begin a battle (be sure to win the battle!). Without taking any steps, press the GS Button and start with an initial search. (Note: If the code is in fact increasing, the normal value upon exiting a battle is zero) Move your character a few steps forward and perform a greater-than search. Walk a few more steps, perform a greater-than search again. Your last step is to initiate a battle and exit. Your next step is to run a less-than search. Repeat this procedure until you get to a manageable size of possibilities to work with. Once you find the correct code, you will be able to walk around until your little hearts content without getting into a battle, astonishing isn't it?

Let's say we've tried again and again to find an increasing 'No Random Battle' code without luck. That leaves us one alternative, find a code that decreases! These codes tend to be slightly more difficult to locate, but are still easy at best. Begin by starting a battle and exit just like before, without walking. At this point perform an initial search. (Note: This tends to be a little more difficult because the codes are not always equal to the same value upon exiting a battle. So an 'equal to' search of the value upon exiting 2 battles in a row, will not work.) Next, walk a few steps, press the GS Button and perform a 'less than' search. Walk a few more steps and perform a 'less than' search again. Get your character into a battle again, exit and perform a greater than search. Just as before, repeat this procedure until you get to a manageable size of possibilities to work with. And soon you won't be bothered by those lame battles ever again! Almost the same procedures as finding the increasing code...ALMOST!

And there we have it. The ability to create a 'No Random Battles' code with your GS Pro and/or hacking software. Since the game's programmer never intended to include a code like this inside the game's programming, there may be random lockups or places you can't access. So, until next time, keep on hackin' and defeat those RPG's in 10 hours or less or your money back!
