BEST OF THE SUMMER CONSUMER ELECTRONICS SHOW

LIGHTS..CAMERA..ACTION!

Another Consumer Electronics Show has come and gone. Like last year, this one was open to the public so everyone could get a hands-on experience of the games they'll be playing tomorrow. All the video game producers were there with the latest achievements in cartridge and CD-ROM technology. Just like before, the EGM editors were there to get pictures of all the games and compile them into one quick reference guide which you're holding now. So here it is, the most complete CES wrap-up you'll find.

NINTENDO SCORES AGAIN!

Hot on the heels of Nintendo's earlier hit StarFox, Nintendo shows off just what the Super FX chip can do. Their latest release is called FX Trax and it's a race game that uses polygon technology to the max! One or two players compete on a two-player split-screen with a variety of rough and tumble tracks. The game was only 40% complete at the time but it was still spectacular!

Originally known as Super Mario Collection, Super Mario All-Stars is a wonderful collection of the greatest Super Mario Bros. games of all time. All of the levels have been enhanced with 16-Bit technology and the music really jams now! If you're a big-time Super Mario fan, this is the one to get!

SF2 MANIA NEVER QUILTS!

The most exciting news of the show was Capcom's official announcement and showing of Street Fighter II: Turbo Edition for the Super NES and Street Fighter II: Special Champion Edition for the Genesis. Both of the versions were available to play and were exciting to say the least. Turbo Edition is an exact translation of the arcade version and offers all the options and characters. No more searching for infamous boss codes with the Game Genie. The Genesis version was also quite a thrill. Although Ryu and Ken were the only playable characters at the time, it still played very well. Choices, choices, choices...

MORTAL KOMBAT SHINES!

The uncanny success of Mortal Kombat in the arcades carries over onto the home systems. Acclaim had their booth decked out with a huge Mortal Kombat logo. All the versions of MK were there and were quite impressive. Even the Game Gear version was quite a sight to behold. To celebrate the event of Mortal Kombat's arrival on the home systems, Acclaim had the actual people who starred in the arcade game there! Kano, Johnny Cage, Raiden, and even Sonya were putting on a show that wowed the crowds. They were even signing autographs for fans.

SUPER NINTENDO VIRTUAL REALITY!

Video game lovers waiting for virtual reality may not need to wait too long! A company called Virtual Maxx was showing off their early version of a Virtual Reality system. The helmet was lightweight and strapped to your head. When you looked inside, there was a small LCD screen playing the old Super NES game, Hyper Zone. To control the game, you simply turned your head to steer the vehicle and try to stay on course. Although it didn't feel like you were actually driving the vehicle, this system does have real possibilities for the future.

NINTENDO SHOWS NEW NES!

In an attempt to boost lagging NES sales, Nintendo of America was showing off their brand new NES system. The system still plays older games but the system is totally redesigned. The cartridges now load into the top just like the Super NES. The power switch and the reset button work similar to the Super NES as well. The real shocker is that Nintendo plans on selling the new Nintendo Entertainment System for a mere $50! Although the NES does have a sleek new look, with the lack of games coming out, it may be a hard sell.

Anyway, this CES show had many great surprises that should keep gamers content for many months.

SUPER NES

The Nintendo area rocked this summer. A multitude of awesome carts were shown. Easily one of the best was the introduction of Street Fighter 2 Turbo Champion Edition. Mega Man X, the long awaited 16-Bit Mega Man title was there compliments of Capcom.

Nintendo had a handful of hot games including Mario All-Stars, Mario VS. Wario, and the latest FX game FX Trax! For Super Scope owners an intense follow-up of BattleClash, and the comical antics of Yoshi's Safari were shown for the first time. Both offer fast-paced shooting action.

Lets not forget Konami! They had a playable version of TMNT: Tournament Fighter, and a Super NES version of Sunset Riders.

Acclaim made a lot of noise with their area. Mortal Kombat was hyped in full scale, and players lined up eager to try it. The comical antics of Ichy and Scratchy will be seen on Super NES screens later this year, as it wasn't quite finished. The arcade hit NBA Jam was shown as well. All in all, a hot booth!

The Ocean area was gigantic. The gates of Jurassic Park opening the way to the monitors gave everyone a glimpse of the Super NES version of the blockbuster hit, inspiring feelings of awe. They also recreated a small suburban town to highlight their new Dennis the Menace game, based on the upcoming movie.

A version of Virtual Reality called the Victor Maxx was available for sampling. Could this be the future of video games on the Super NES?

The modest Toho booth hid the terrific Super Godzilla game that will soon be out on these shores. They also had their robotic golf game on the screens as well.

The RPG people at FCI introduced Super WCW Wrestling, and it could shape up to be one of the better wrestling carts.

Overall, all the companies exhibiting at the Summer CES had something new, and there was plenty to see and do. If this show is any indication of what is to come, we are definitely in for a treat. Super NES is still going strong, possibly stronger than before!

GENESIS

Rivaling the size of the Nintendo area, Sega put on an impressive show. Trying to dominate the Summer CES, Sega of America showed their latest lineup of cartridges, CDs, and even a new arcade machine. The entire booth, complete with licensees, comprised a large part of the electronic games section.

The games ranged from the spectacular to the mediocre. The best part of the Sega exhibit had to be the eight-player Virtua Racing arcade setup, and it was not uncommon to see an EGM editor playing it at any one time. Also on exhibit was Sonic the Hedgehog tentatively titled on the Megalo 50 arcade machine. Featuring game play similar to Marble Madness, up to three players could tackle the terrors of Dr. Robotnik. Totally hot! The AS-1 simulator also attracted attention, especially since tickets to see it in action were difficult to acquire.

Sega, hoping to capitalize on Jurassic Park hype, decided to have the huge gates of the park opening the way to the latest incarnations of the movie. One of the actual vehicles from the movie added to the effect.

Not to buckle under the pressure from Nintendo, the folks at Sega put on a grand show on a make-shift stage, where the activator and virtual reality were demonstrated.

Speaking of Virtual Reality, it was at the show, but getting in to see it was among one of the toughest things to do. It looks like Sega has some incredible technology up their sleeve.

Hundreds of cartridges crawled out of the woodwork, including some titles never before seen. Shadowrun for the Genesis looked hot, and Sonic Spinball, though unfinished, is a radical concept. Eternal Champions will be competing directly with Capcom's Street Fighter 2 Champion Edition, and surprisingly seems to be a better game.

There were plenty of surprises at the show, and they give a good impression of what's to come. With Sega breaking down the Genesis's technical limits, the future looks very bright. One can only wait and see what is coming up next year.

SEGA CD

Despite the small number of games currently available for this system, Sega had a major showing this summer. Having one of the largest booths at the show, Sega wanted to make it loud and clear that the Sega CD is here to stay. Everywhere you looked in their area, CD games were wooing players who were scrambling to see what was coming out.

Silpheed was near completion, and drew a large crowd eager to see what the CD could do, but even it was overshadowed by Rebel Assault. In that game you are a Rebel pilot trying to down Imperial Tie-Fighters and other nasties. The graphics are great, and huge cinemas make this CD a real treat. Star Wars fans won't be able to put this one down.

Mortal Kombat and its visceral graphics will also be heading to the Sega CD. Expect it to be better than all the previous cart versions.

American Laser Games went all out this time around. The group is planning on bringing out their arcade games like Mad Dog McCree II onto the home format. Will it replace the arcade format? Probably not.

Expect to see a whole slew of games similar to Sewer Shark, the best probably being Microcosm. The game Dracula was attracting large crowds with its excellent graphics.

Mentioning the Sega CD games wouldn't be complete without mentioning Jurassic Park. This game is out on almost every format, and the Sega CD takes the most radical approach. Comparable to virtual reality, you get to struggle your way through Jurassic Park. Definitely a hot title with great animation.

WWF fans should look to the Sega CD for some major action with Acclaim's WWF Rage in the Cage. It looks like it could be one of the best wrestling games for Sega.

The Summer CES has breathed new life into the Sega CD. While it seemed like there would be no new games, we instead found out that Sega is readying a multitude of games. Sega of America has stuck by their guns to make the CD system the best it can be. Let's see what they can do next time!

T.T.I. DUO

Turbo Tech is still going strong! The Duo really had a fantastic booth packed with new softs and also some new add-ons that enhance the capabilities of the Duo to new heights. Not only that, but some big names have just come to the Duo! Like last year, their main concentration on games consisted of CD titles, all of which had really jamming music, superb graphics, and detailed cinemas!

A majority of the new games displayed consisted of RPGs; no doubt they are following in the light of the success of Y's 1, 2, and 3, as well as Dragon Slayer. Their new RPGs are Blood Gear, which was not on the show floor, and Xak 1 and 2 (a game similar to the format of Y's 1 and 2). Speaking of RPGs, T.T.I. still has not commented on whether or not it will bring the Super CD version of Y's IV, the Dawn of Y's, to American shores. But judging by the popularity the first three obtained, it would not be a mistake to bring the next version out. And for all the fans of the lengthy RPG Dragon Slayer, the sequel should be hitting these shores by the end of the year!

For you CD owners looking for some good action to keep your trigger fingers supple, look to many of the upcoming titles to fulfill your hopes! The top of the list is for all those one-on-one SF2 fans who also enjoy the excitement of giant monsters with Godzilla! Featuring digitized monster roars and superb animation, as well as soundtracks and backdrops from the series, this CD title will be a sure blast! Also along the same lines is King of the Monsters 2! Ported over from the Neo-Geo version, this title sports really nifty graphics and the music is enhanced from the Neo version! Two Robotech games were also on display, one being a shooter and another a military sim. Finally, John Madden CD was also shown and appeared to have promise.

At the show, T.T.I. also had a new device that allows Karaoke to be played on the Duo. Demonstrations were being done at the booth for all to enjoy. With all of these new softs coming out, along with some great new peripherals, T.T.I. is here to stay!

NINTENDO

Well, the first system that resurrected the video game market and Nintendo's old profit maker is really showing its age. Very few softs were at the show, and what they were showing didn't have the necessary pizzazz to make them as illustrious as they were two years ago.

There were a few that did present themselves as original and good compared to the other titles for the system. Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles - Tournament Fighter was a decent creation. Considering the fact that there are really no fighting games for the system, this one stood out as probably one of the best NES titles. Other games that showed promise were Star Trek: TNG, which had all sorts of plot interactions, and Ren and Stimpy were there bringing their cartoon mayhem to the NES players.

The real treat was the release of the NES 2! This systems is to retail for under $50. At present, it was not said whether it will come with any game carts or how many controllers. When the word gets out, we'll let you know.

STAR TREK: TNG

NINTENDO DEBUTS NEW NES!

Smaller, compact and stylish. The new NES is all of these and more.

Many players have complained about the problems of getting the carts to work right in their NES. Nintendo has listened to the public, and is correcting this problem with the introduction of the new NES. Sleek and stylish, this new version of the popular system will be priced at a measly $50! Not only that, but it comes with a controller that responds well to your commands. It's a welcome change.
